Utah Weapons Crimes Defense

Anything that can physically harm or kill a person is considered a weapon under state law. Due to this broad definition, weapons charges are usually added onto other offenses, such as a traffic violation or burglary. If weapons are involved in a crime, the consequences of that crime are worse than normal. Examples include longer jail time, higher fines, the loss of parental rights, and other punishments. Utah Domestic Violence Defense

Did you know that if you are convicted of domestic violence charges that you can be banned from hunting? Under Utah law, a person convicted of domestic violence loses the right to possess a gun and ammunition of any kind. Even having an alleged victim drop the charges against you does not mean that you won't face prosecution. In some cases, the prosecuting attorney can choose to proceed with the case without the victim. Don't let domestic violence charges ruin your life.
