Burglary Laws in Utah

The Utah Code 76-6-202 defines burglar as a person who unlawfully gets into a building or a portion of it with the intent to commit:

If the burglary is committed in a residential building, it is considered a second-degree felony. If it is committed in any other building, it is a third-degree felony. However, certain factors can increase the level of offense to an aggravated burglary in either type of offense. These factors include:

- If the offender causes bodily harm to any person
- If the offender has, threatens or uses a dangerous weapon or an explosive against a person or people

In Utah, it is the intention to commit any of the mentioned crimes that matters in a burglary conviction and not the actual crime.

Burglary Sentence You Face if Found Guilty

When coming up with burglary charges the judge considers such factors as:

- Where the incident happened. Was it a residential, commercial, or an abandoned property?
- The type and extent of the crime the defendant intended to commit. For instance, the judge will ask whether the defendant used any force during the crime
- Whether the defendant had any weapons
- Past criminal records such as previous burglary convictions

Utah's laws classify aggravated burglary as a first-degree offense. The charge attracts a fine of up to $10,000 and 5 years imprisonment. If the burglary was committed in a residential setting, this is a second-degree felony. The burglary charges could include one to 15 years imprisonment and a fine of up to $10,000. Third-degree burglaries felonies in Utah are punished by up to five years imprisonment alongside a fine of up to $5,000.
