Driving on a Suspended or Revoked License Laws in Utah

In Utah, driving with a suspended or revoked license is a crime punishable by substantial fines or even jail time. Utah uses a points-based system to determine when someone's driver's license should be suspended. Under Utah Code § 53-3-221\(4\)\(a\), drivers can receive points for infractions such as speeding, driving without insurance, and driving under the influence of alcohol. A driver's license can also be suspended or revoked in relation to certain criminal convictions.

If your driver's license is suspended or revoked and you are found driving in Salt Lake City, you will most likely be charged with a Class C misdemeanor (Utah Code § 53-3-227\(2\)), although the circumstances of each case can have an effect on the outcome. In some cases, including driving under the influence of alcohol or a controlled substance or refusing to submit to test to determine if you are driving under the influence, you may be charged with a Class B misdemeanor.

Consequences You Face if Found Guilty of Driving on a Suspended or Revoked License in Utah

If you are found guilty of driving on a revoked or suspended driver's license, you will be facing a minimum of $750 in fines and up to 90 days in jail if convicted of a Class C misdemeanor, while a Class B misdemeanor carries a $1,000 fine and a maximum of six months in jail. You may also face a longer suspension or revocation period than you originally were and may have to get more costly vehicle insurance.
