What Does a Mayhem Charge Mean in Utah?

According to Utah law, someone has committed a mayhem crime if he or she has illegally and intentionally injured or removed another person's body parts. For example, if the accused has disabled a person's tongue, eye, nose, lip, hand, or other body part or deliberately caused it to become useless by cutting it out or off or mutilating it. Criminal mayhem is a Second Degree felony in Utah. It has sometimes been charged as a crime of domestic violence.

Cases of mayhem have usually involved violent incidents in which a body part was bitten off or cut off. A typical mayhem case would be one in which, for example, someone is accused of biting off or cutting off another person's ear or finger while in a fight.

How Does Proof of Intent Work in Mayhem Cases?

Actions that cause the loss of another person's body part do not necessarily justify a criminal charge of mayhem. It must be proven in court that the individual intentionally caused the injury or removal of the body part. Accidentally causing the damage or loss of a body part during a physical altercation is not an event defined as criminal mayhem under Utah law. (However, other serious charges may apply in such situations, such as aggravated assault.)
