Origin of Jessica's Law

Following the tragic kidnapping and murder of a young girl by a registered sex offender in 2005, Florida established stringent legal provisions, known as Jessica's Law. Named after victim Jessica Lunsford, this law mandates a minimum sentence of 25 years to life for certain sex crimes against minors. Since its enactment, 44 states, including Utah, have adopted similar provisions.

Utah's Application of Jessica's Law

Jessica's Law in Utah is employed to safeguard potential victims of child sexual assault. It enforces stringent mandatory minimum sentences, even for first-time child sex offenders. A conviction under this law carries far-reaching and potentially life-long penalties, extending well beyond imprisonment and fines.

Collateral Consequences of a Conviction

Having a sex crime on your record could lead to additional collateral implications. This might inhibit your ability to secure professional licensing or qualify for a mortgage, thus impacting various aspects of your life.
